Workshop description

In recent years, the issue of inequality has gained momentum in academic and public debates. From the high levels of current US inequality to the long-run perspective offered by Thomas Piketty in Capital in the 21st Century, questions about inequality are increasingly central to social science inquiry. In this workshop, we will explore recent advancements in the economic history of race/ethnicity, gender, class, and other facets of inequality. In particular, we intend to take advantage of the interdisciplinary nature of economic history to foster dialogue about these elements of inequality with other disciplines such as anthropology, sociology, political science, philosophy and history.

The theme of this workshop speaks to one of the challenges faced by liberal arts colleges (LACs): diversity. Many of the LACs state in their mission statement the value of a diverse and inclusive educational community. With this workshop we emphasize the racial, ethnic, gender, and class dimensions of diversity from a historical perspective. By engaging in scholarly discussions on these issues, we intend to raise their profile in our institutions.

This workshop, which will build on the success of two previous workshops (Williams 2010 and Denison 2013) will take place at Middlebury College in the spring of 2015. This initiative has two main goals:

- (i) To provide a forum for economic historians in liberal arts colleges to present, discuss, and refine academic work.
- (ii) To integrate colleagues and students in other disciplines and programs (such as sociology, anthropology, and feminist and gender studies) in a discussion on topics of race/ethnicity, gender, and class from a historical and economic perspective.

These goals serve the practical needs of faculty in LACs. As researchers, it is key for career advancement to interact with fellow economic historians at other institutions and to build avenues of communication and collaboration with colleagues in other disciplines. As members of elite LACs, we share the challenge of fostering diversity within our institutions.

From a research perspective, this workshop will provide an opportunity for approximately one dozen economic historians to present their work. As the papers will be distributed in advance, this format allows for feedback from discussants and the audience. Two renowned economic historians specializing in issues of race, class, and/or gender will provide keynote addresses. In addition, a roundtable discussion with Middlebury faculty from other disciplines will serve as a space to informally discuss these issues within an interdisciplinary, liberal arts framework. Many Middlebury faculty successfully incorporate these issues into their classes. We would like to learn strategies to bring these topics in our courses. From talks with students at Middlebury, there is a perception that race, ethnicity, gender, and class do not fall in the realm of economics. We will invite Middlebury faculty from a range of disciplines.

These workshops have been very successful in the past. Participants have benefitted from a network of colleagues for mentoring in research and teaching. This feature has been key for many, as we exist as singletons in our respective institutions. This workshop will explore how economic history research and teaching can advance discussions on diversity in LACs. For all participants, it will promote coverage of diversity issues in the classroom. More specifically, this workshop will serve as a springboard for a session at an academic conference to share our work with the broader field. In terms of teaching, as we develop or change courses to include diversity issues we will post and share our syllabi with the economic history community through the website eh.net.

Proposed schedule

H	r1	a	21
		u	uy

7:00	Opening Dinner
Saturday
8:00-8:45	Breakfast
9:00-10:30	Session 1
10:30-11:00	Coffee break
11:00-12:30	Session 2
12:30-2:00	Lunch and keynote speaker
2:00-3:30	Session 3
3:30-4:00	Coffee break
4:00-5:30	Session 4
7:00	Dinner and keynote speaker
Sunday:
8:00-9:00	Breakfast
9:00-11:00	Roundtable discussion: race, gender, and class in the liberal arts

In each session, two presenters will have 20 minutes to summarize their papers followed by an assigned discussant and a Q&A session. All the papers will be available two weeks before the workshop on a designated website hosted at Middlebury.

We would like the workshop to take place at a central location on campus such as Axinn Center to facilitate participation of students.

Proposed budget

Totals based on 18 non-Middlebury participants from Mellon 23/AALAC colleges, 5 Middlebury participants, and 2 invited outside speakers, for a total of at most 25. This assumes that those listed above – who have specifically confirmed their interest in the workshop – do attend, along with two other non-Middlebury faculty members (requiring air travel). We have also assumed that faculty at nearby schools will utilize ground transportation to reach Middlebury. None of the organizers is requesting a stipend.

Travel, Room, and Board	17,203
Hotel (Middlebury Inn or Inn at the Green): 2 nights x $110/night x 20 people	= $4,400
